SEEK TO RECOVER ELECTION MONEY

County's Effort to Get from the State Money for Primary of Two Years Ago will be Argued Tuesday at Harrisburg.

Argument will be held in Dauphin County Court to-morrow to recover for Adams County the sum of $2032.62 due from the State for the primary election expenses of 1913. The question at issue is of interest and importance to every county, involving, as it does, a question which has never yet been decided.

Some years ago a State-aid highway was constructed in Straban township near Hunterstown, the total cost of which was something over $30,000. Of this, Adams County paid its share of $8426.33 and Straban paid a portion of its share which was the same. The State paid a half of the full amount.

The primary election expenses of 1913 were advanced by Adams County to be re-paid by the State. The Auditor General drew an order on the State Treasury in favor of Adams County for this amount, but State Treasurer R. K. Young refused to pay it and applied the amount on the Straban township road account.

Some time ago Adams County instituted mandamus proceedings in Dauphin County Court to compel State Treasurer Young to pay to this county these election expenses. The case will be argued Tuesday before the Dauphin County Court. It is the first time the matter, which is to be decided under the interpretation of the Sproul Act of 1911, has come before the courts, and every county in the State has a keen interest in it.

Attorney General Francis S. Brown will represent the State Treasurer, and Adams County will be represented by J. Donald Swope, Esq., county solicitor, and by John D. Keith, Esq., special counsel.

INHERITS $64,000

Unexpected Fortune Suddenly Comes to W. E. Huntington.

While looking for work in Hagerstown, W. E. Huntington, formerly of Holyoke, Mass., received news that a fortune of $64,000 was awaiting him in Holyoke.

He was officially informed that the trust estate of Zachariah Huntington, of Holyoke, a relative of Mr. Huntington, has expired, and the lawyers who are settling up the estate have deposited the funds in bank and filed with the court the list of sales of real estate owned by the elder Huntington to the amount of over $100,000, and they have asked for a distribution. It is reported that one of the heirs has been ruled out and the court will pass on the claims of the other heirs, there being two remaining, including W. E. Huntington, and allot them their shares.

Mr. Huntington, since going to Hagerstown several months ago, has been working at anything he could find. He came from Salem, where he had lost his household goods and other effects in a fire, and asked for credit at a furniture store and got it. Huntington and wife are now ready to take life easy.

WATER WAGON TOUR IS HERE

Rail Splitter Quartet Sings War Time Songs. Stop on Tour to the Pacific Coast. Good Audience for Noon Meeting.

Patriotism and Prohibition vied with each other for the supremacy in the large mass meeting held in St. James Lutheran church this afternoon by Dr. Russell and the Rail Splitter Quartet on their way from coast to coast over the Lincoln Highway in the first "water wagon" tour.

As a fitting introduction to the program Dr. Russell flung out a large silk flag, the audience rose and sang "America", and then he plunged into the subject of the campaign which has prompted this most ambitious and unusual tour for the cause of temperance.

Dr. Russell characterized the Lincoln Highway as the most worthy and most tremendous memorial to an individual ever attempted and far more beautiful than the large new memorial building now being erected in Washington at national expense. He dwelt at length upon Lincoln's stand against liquor and quoted his oft-remembered remark that he would sooner lose his right hand than sign the liquor measure for the purpose of raising war revenue.

He spoke of Lincoln's start in the fight for total abstinence, of how he circulated pledges in the small Illinois communities and of how in recent years the number of persons signing this pledge had increased until the number has reached the amazing total of 3,400,000. Of this number 1,600,000 were secured on the last World's Temperance Sunday.

Calling attention to the numerous accidents caused through automobile drivers being under the influence of liquor, Dr. Russell made the statement that, if there were no other reason for national prohibition, the advent of the automobile should be sufficient. "When this highway is safe," he said, "we will have a sober nation." He then went on to tell the plan of campaign on the highway.

Beginning this fall, large prohibition posters will be exhibited all over the route from coast to coast, the posters being changed every week. Circulars will be distributed by means of the Sunday School to millions of people, especially to those who are not regular church attendants.

"See This Thing Through" is the slogan of those who have started the "Five Year War" for the passage of the National Prohibition Amendment and Dr. Russell outlined at length the various agencies to be brought into play to accomplish the desired end.

The meeting was largely attended and highly enthusiastic. Dr. Russell would talk for only about five minutes at a time and then the Rail Splitter Quartet, composed of Ohio Wesleyan College students would sing an appropriate song. They have remarkably mellow voices which blended beautifully in the war time songs and the other patriotic airs which they sang. All in all it was one of the best and most successful temperance meetings held in Gettysburg for a long while.

The party, in two automobiles bearing the Lincoln Highway ensign, left after a tour of the battlefield for Chambersburg where another meeting will be held this evening. From there they will go on West, conducting sessions at no less than one hundred towns. The tour started from New York on July fifth.

CHILDREN TO MANAGE TOWN

Will Try Various Methods of Running a Municipality. Brand New Idea for Gettysburg will be Watched with Much Interest.

Something unusual and decidedly original is in store for the sessions of the Junior Chautauqua which opens in connection with the regular sessions on Friday of this week.

Each morning at Junior Chautauqua there will be a "town meeting," and the children will be the citizens. There will be a commission form of government, with commissioners nominated and elected by the children themselves. There will be a "Law and Order Commission", which will be responsible for the discipline during the week. The "Health Commission" will be interested in calling the children's attention to the menace of flies, mosquitoes, etc. The "Clean Up Commission" will arouse interest in clean streets and back yards, etc. The "Make Good Commission" will consider the standards of usefulness for good citizens—girls and boys.

Each commission will be given one day for its phase of the work.

On the last day the Juniors will present "The Pageant of Average Town", in which the work that has been outlined will be presented. It will not only cover this work, but will present to you some of the games and songs taught during the week.

This play will be given with special costumes provided by the Chautauqua Association. In this pageant the things that characterize the average town will be presented in a striking manner. It will show "Average Town" falling asleep, while flies, mosquitoes, impure milk, ugly back yards, etc. (each impersonated by a boy or girl) surround her. "Wake Up" and "Clean Up" arrive, and the effort to save "Average Town" begins. Various scenes follow, given with music and scenic effects, and closing with the triumph of "Wake Up" and "Clean Up." Special rhymes, special music, and the special costumes will make this one of the most interesting playlets ever presented to a Chautauqua audience.

This is but a brief outline of the plans for this year's Junior Chautauqua, and this department, interesting as it has proved in the past, will prove of still greater interest and importance this year.

ADVERTISE THEIR TOWN

The Waynesboro Motor Club is discussing the erection of a large sign in Fayetteville at the junction of the Waynesboro road and the Lincoln Highway, on which shall be told the distance to that place, the fact that through Waynesboro runs the highway to the south and other important facts. A number of merchants will erect along the road between there and Fayetteville signs telling how to reach Waynesboro, the distance, etc.

Dr. Gerhardt also performed the marriage ceremonies which united his daughter, granddaughter and great granddaughter. He is the oldest living graduate of Gettysburg College.

COUNTY ORPHANS TO SING AT PARK

Children from Hoffman Orphanage will be Taken to Pen Mar for Reformed Reunion. Will be a Feature of the Annual Event.

An elaborate program has been prepared for the twenty-sixth annual reunion of the Reformed churches, which will be held next Thursday at Pen Mar. Probably the most interesting of the events scheduled are the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner," with an accompanying pantomime by the children of the Hoffman Orphanage near Littlestown, and the address which will be delivered by the Rev. Dr. J. M. G. Darms, pastor of Salem church in Allentown.

The exercises will open at 1:30 o'clock in the afternoon with a prelude by the Pen Mar orchestra. The Rev. Jacob N. Hauser, pastor of St. John's church, York, will deliver the opening prayer and Miss Laura Remsburg, of Middletown, will sing a solo. This will be followed by Dr. Darms' address.

The singing of the national anthem is the next event scheduled, and after a hymn by the congregation the "all college hour" will bring the program to a close. There will probably be a number of informal entertainments provided in addition to those on the program.

The reunion will be held during the course of a missionary conference of Reformed church workers, which will be under the chairmanship of the Rev. Dr. George A. Snyder, of Middletown, Md. This conference and the reunion are not under the same management, but the two bodies are working together to make both events a decided success.

TEAM AND AUTO IN SMASH-UP

Horse Plunges into Ford Car Near Arendtsville. One Man Has Broken Check Bone as Result. Driving Team Damaged.

In a mix-up between two teams and a Ford car on the road between Biglerville and Arendtsville Saturday night, Robert E. Fisher, of near Arendtsville, was severely injured and several others were badly cut and bruised.

Earl Wisler, of Cashtown, driving at breakneck speed, urged his horse around the Ford car which was being run slowly. Farther down the road Wisler drove his team into that of Guy Thomas, whose horse reared and plunged, freeing itself from the buggy. In the darkness the Thomas horse dashed headlong into the Ford, smashing the windshield and damaging the fore part of the machine.

Mr. Fisher, who was in the car, was rendered unconscious while the other occupants escaped unhurt. His injuries consist of a broken cheek bone and severe cuts and bruises about the head. He was hurried to Arendtsville where he was given medical attention and recovered consciousness some time later.

The Thomas buggy was badly damaged and its occupants bruised and shaken up. Wisler's buggy lost a wheel and the horse was driven home with a pole acting as the fourth wheel.

GERMAN ANSWER BEFORE LANSING

Secretary Studies Text Before
Conferring With President.

"DISCOURTESY" ROUSES ANGER

The Belief is General That Berlin's
Evasion Will Evoke an Unyielding
Rejoinder.

U. S. DEMANDS AND GERMANY'S OFFERS

What America Asked.

May 15—It (the United States government) confidently expects, therefore, that the imperial German government will disavow the acts of which the government of the United States complains, that they will make reparation, so far as reparation is possible, for injuries which are without measure, and that they will take immediate steps to prevent the recurrence of anything so obviously subversive of the principles of warfare.

June 10—The government of the United States therefore very earnestly and solemnly renews the representation of its note transmitted to the imperial German government on the 15th day of May.

The government of the United States deems it reasonable to expect that the imperial German government will adopt the measures necessary to put these principles into practice in respect of the safeguarding of American lives and American ships, and asks for assurances that this will be done.

Berlin's Reply.

First—Reiterated assurance that American ships engaged in legitimate trade will not be interfered with nor the lives of Americans upon neutral ships be endangered.

Second—German submarines will be instructed to allow American passenger ships to pass freely and safely, Germany entertaining in return the confident hope that the American government will see these ships do not carry contraband. Such ships are to be provided with distinguishing marks and their arrival announced in advance. The same privilege is extended to a reasonable number of neutral passenger ships under the American flag.

Germany is willing to permit America to place four hostile passenger steamers under the American flag to ply between North America and Europe under the same conditions.

Washington, July 12.—The official text of Germany's reply, which evaded the demands of the United States regarding submarine warfare, has reached the state department. It was found identical with the text published in news dispatches from Berlin.

After a thorough study of the text, Secretary Lansing will take it to Corbin, N. H., and confer with President Wilson, who will decide upon the policy the United States will follow. When this is determined President Wilson will return to Washington and confer with the cabinet.

It is believed that the American rejoinder will be ready for presentation to the German foreign office in less than a fortnight.

The trend of discussion indicated that the third note to be sent to Berlin by the president will be a brief re-statement of the American position, coupled with a refusal to consider the German counter proposals, and a formal notification that the United States realizes the nation's duties toward American citizens and will fulfill those duties without flinching, whatever course of action may become necessary.

The president is known to be desirous of avoiding the appearance of delivering an ultimatum to Germany. In the situation that now exists, however, diplomatists do not see how the deadlock can be ended unless a sharp rejoinder is made to the latest German note, in which a request will be made for prompt answer to the American demands that American citizens shall not again be endangered by Germany's lawless methods of sea warfare.

Germany's evasion of this issue and Berlin's silence on the subject of disavowal of the sinking of the Lusitania are regarded in Washington as most discourteous. It is not customary for a great power to refuse to answer a plain question put by another great power.

Anger was openly expressed in official circles over the persistent reports from Berlin that the German government was influenced in sending an unsatisfactory reply to President Wilson by the belief that the resignation of William J. Bryan had weakened the support given to President Wilson by the American people.

There is little doubt in Washington that these reports are correct and that the Kaiser's diplomatists have believed that Mr. Bryan's objections to the president's policy of protecting citizens in their rights has had the effect of dividing public sentiment in the United States.

The question as to whether James W. Gerard, American minister to Germany, will be recalled will not be decided until after the president's third note has been sent to Berlin. All of Germany's actions since the sinking of the Lusitania are regarded as having revealed a disposition to gain time rather than meet the issue squarely.

AUSTRIANS LOSE IN SURPRISE ATTACK

Alpine Troops Scale Heights and Carry Positions.

Rome, July 12.—Two victories of importance have been won by Italian troops against the enemy.

An Austrian force was taken by surprise by Italian infantry advancing up the Terragnole valley, toward Malgoberta and Costabella, and thrown back in defeat.

Alpine soldiers, who already have covered themselves with glory, made sure the other victory. Following two attacks on the heights about Corda mole, an Alpine contingent scaled Mont Tofano and, taking the Austrians by surprise, carried all their trenches.

The battle on the Isonzo front is becoming more and more one of artillery. To meet the increased number of Austrian batteries the Italians have brought up more guns, and the official communication from General Cadorna asserts that the Italian cannoniers have gained an ascendancy over the enemy's artillery.

Unofficial reports, unconfirmed by the war office, say that the Italians have won a great victory on the Cozzo plateau, where a battle has raged for the last week. If this report is true it means that the Italian efforts to isolate Gorizia from railroad communication with the interior has succeeded and that an important step forward toward Trieste has been accomplished.

FIRM REFUSES WAR ORDERS

Wyoming Concern Declares Making of Munitions Is Unneutral.

Reading, Pa., July 12.—I consider it against the neutrality proclamation of President Wilson for this nation to make munitions of war for any of the struggling armies of Europe and Asia.

In this emphatic manner Ferdinand Thun, president of the Textile Machine works, of Wyomissing, expressed the reasons of his firm's refusal to accept war orders which would have netted a profit of about $50,000.

"It is barbarous, it is inhuman and it is immoral," continued Mr. Thun in explaining that his concern had declined orders from a Chicago firm for furnishing shrapnel shell forgings.

EXPLODING CAPS BURN BOY

Youth's Clothing Takes Fire When Mother Spanks Him.

Bloomington, Pa., July 12.—When Mrs. William Brown, of Jamison City, administered corporal punishment on her young son she regretted she didn't first investigate.

A resounding explosion followed the meeting of the palm of her hand with the boy's trouser seat, and instantly the lad's clothing caught fire.

She struck a box of caps for his toy pistol. His body and knees, to which the caps fell through the boy's bloomer trousers, were seriously burned.

Passed Burning Ship.

New York, July 12.—Passengers arriving from Liverpool on board the steamship St. Paul, of the American line, told of seeing an unidentified bark in flames and burning to the water's edge close to the grave of the ill-fated steamship Lusitania. That the vessel had been set afire after having been torpedoed by a German submarine was the opinion of the passengers.

Sunken Submarines Lie Together.

Turin, July 12.—Divers operating for the recovery of the Italian submarine Medusa in the Adriatic have discovered another submarine, evidently Austrian, nearby on the bottom. It is evident that both were sunk in a submarine duel.

THE ALLIES WIN NEW VICTORIES

Germans Driven From Trenches
Near Arras.

ARTILLERY DUELS ON AISNE

British Expel Kaiser's Troops From
New Line and French Complete
Conquest of Series of Positions.

Paris, July 12.—Victories for both the British and the French armies over the Germans were announced by the French war office.

The British succeeded in expelling the Kaiser's forces from a trench in which the Germans had gained a footing, and the French completed the conquest of a series of positions, from the greater number of which the Germans were driven on Thursday.

The location of the British fight with the Germans is not given. The French won their success on the battlefield north of Arras.

Artillery combats have taken place near Neuport, Belgium, and along the Aisne, in France, districts in which there had been little activity recently, and also north of Arras and in the forest of Le Pretre.

In Alsace a French aviator attacked a German aeroplane and brought it to earth near Altkirch. The war office statement says:

"The British army repulsed a German attack which had gained a temporary foothold in some elements of the first line. The Germans were driven out by an immediate counter attack."

"In the region to the north of Arras our troops completed the dislodgment of the enemy from certain elements of the trenches, where he had been able to maintain himself along a line which we originally took July 8."

"To the north of the station of Souchez an enemy counter attack delivered during the night was repulsed."

"Upon other sections of the front particularly violent cannonades are reported in the region of Neuport, in the sector of the Aisne, as well as in Lorraine, in the forest of Le Pretre and near the Montel bridge."

"One of our aviators sent a German aviator to earth in the neighborhood of Altkirch. He fell within sight of our lines."

Berlin Says Attacks Were Repulsed

Berlin, July 12.—The German army headquarters staff gave out the following official statement:

"In the western theater: North of Ypres, the English repeated their attempts of July 6 to take possession of our position on the canal. The attack failed with heavy loss to the enemy."

"Due north of Souchez on the Aisne road the French made an attack which met with a German attack. The fighting continued."

"A French attack on Fricourt, south of Albert, was easily repulsed. A trench captured from the enemy northwest of the Beausejour farm was lost on the following morning."

Saturday night, however, it was again stormed, and after five attacks we took it."

"Between Alilly and Apremont hand grenade assaults by the French were unsuccessful."

"In the forest of Le Pretre an attack, which was prepared for by heavy artillery fire, broke down in front of our new positions. The enemy's loss was heavy. An assault upon our position southeast of Soudernach and southeast of Muenster was beaten off."

WED 52 YEARS; SILENT 50

Silence of Massachusetts Couple Revealed by Fire.

Boston, July 12.—Fifty-two years married and fifty years gone by without speaking to each other. This is the remarkable record of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wing, of Southwesterport.

Outside of their neighbors, who have known of the estrangement for years, but have refrained from mentioning it, the unique separation of the old people did not become known to the world at large until their home was destroyed by fire.

Few people knew the cause of the rift between the couple, and they treasure their secret. It began shortly after their marriage, a half century ago; both have endured the situation and both apparently have lived happy, contented and useful lives. Their only conversation during that long span of time has been carried on through the medium of a third person.

Child Bride Poses as Woman.

Sunbury, Pa., July 12.—With her curly chestnut hair done up as a woman for the first time and wearing long dresses, also for the first time, Miss Selma Engle, fifteen years old, became the bride of Leon Rettinger, seventeen years old. Rev. C. D. Zwiell performed the ceremony. Both live in Sunbury.

Becker Denied Appeal.

40,000 VISITORS AT MT. GRETTA

Brave Storm to See Guardsmen Parade.

Mount Gretna, Pa., July 12.—An accident that almost assumed the proportions of a tragedy and a drenching rain marred visitors' day at Camp Schall.

The accident occurred on the narrow gauge railway which skirts the encampment and created a panic among hundreds of men and women.

One of the small coaches was overbalanced by a crowd of men and boys on the running board, and it fell over against a tree. Men, women and children in the car screamed, but fortunately no one was seriously injured.

A guardsman of the Eighth regiment who had been riding on the running board was cut and bruised. He was taken to the camp hospital.

An unidentified woman was slightly injured about the shoulders. She was taken to Lebanon in an automobile.

In general it was an unfavorable day, but the army of men and women, numbering easily 40,000, who rushed to Mount Gretna from all sections of the state to review the citizen soldiers on division parade defied the storm until the 8000 men had marched by general headquarters.

Thunder rolled and lightning flashed on the gun barrels of the troops, but the mothers, wives, sisters and sweethearts stood their ground with patriotic loyalty until the last regiment rounded the final turn of the field.

It was an impressive sight, under the leaden skies, this spectacle of 8000 men passing in review.

Aged Woman Dying, and Venerable
Mother in Collapse.

Washington, Pa., July 10.—Her reason partially dethroned after she had lain for two days and nights in sunshine and rain, pinned to the ground by a huge log under a tree from which she had fallen while picking cherries, Elizabeth Sine, aged sixty-seven years, of Berry township, in Greene county, is in a dying condition at her home.

Her mother, Ruhama Sine, aged eighty-six years, for two years a helpless invalid, is weakened and demented after watching the daughter suffer and unable to give any help. She also will probably die. The aged women lived alone on a little farm.

This was all done without pain to the patient, novocaine having been used in the case. It is the first time that novocaine has been used in this vicinity. The operation was successful and Wolfe is recovering.

CHAPTER XIV—Oliver cannot be found. Black and Reuther go in search of him.

CHAPTER XV—Oliver is found but runs away again.

CHAPTER XVI.

Found and Lost.

It was Oliver. Oliver unkempt and with signs upon him of a night's work of study or writing; but Oliver!—her lover once, but now just a stranger into whose hand she must put this letter.

She tried to stammer out her errand; but the sudden pallor, the starting eyes—the whole shocked, almost terrified appearance of the man she was facing, stopped her. She forgot the surprise, the incredulity of mind with which he would naturally hail her presence at his door in a place so remote and of such inaccessible. She only saw that his hands had gone up and out at sight of her, and to her sensitive soul, this looked like a rebuff which, while expected, choked back her words and turned her faintly flushing cheek scarlet.

"It is not I," burst from her lips in incoherent disclaimer of his possible thought. "I'm just a messenger. Your father—"

"It is you!" Quickly his hands passed across his eyes. "How—?" Then his glance, following hers, fell on the letter which she now remembered to hold out.

"It's the copy of a telegram," she tremblingly explained, as he continued to gaze at it without reaching to take it. "You could not be found in Detroit and as it was important that you should receive this word from your father, I undertook to deliver it. I remembered your fondness for this place and how you once said that this is where you would like to write your books, and so I came on a venture—but not alone—Mr. Black is with me and—"

"Mr. Black! Who? What?" He was still staring at his father's letter; and still had made no offer to take it.

"Read this first," said she. Then he woke to the situation. He took the letter, and drawing her inside, shut the door while he read it. She, trembling very much, did not dare to lift her eyes to watch its effect, but she was conscious that his back and not his face was turned her way, and that the moment was the stillest one of her whole life.

Then there came a rattling noise as he crushed the letter in his hand. "Tell me what this means," said he, but he did not turn his head as he made this request.

"Your father must do that," was her gentle reply. "I was only to deliver the letter. I came—we came—thus early, because we thought—we feared we should get no opportunity later to find you here alone. There seem to be people on the road—whom—whom you might feel obliged to entertain and as your father cannot wait—"

He had started about the time confronted here. It was a look she did not understand and which made him seem a stranger to her. Involuntarily she took a step back.

"I must be going now," said she, and fell—her physical weakness triumphing at last over her will power.

"Oliver? Where is Oliver?" These were Reuther's first words, as, coming to herself, she perceived Mr. Black bending helplessly over her. The answer was brief, almost indifferferent. Alanson Black was cursing himself for allowing her to come to this house alone.

"He was here a moment ago. When he saw you begin to give signs of life, he slid out. How do you feel, my dear? What will your mother say?"

"But Oliver?" She was on her feet now; she had been lying on some sort of couch. "He must—Oh, I remember now. Mr. Black, we must go. I have given him his father's letter."

"We are not going till you have something to eat. Not a word. I'll—Why did his eye wander to the nearest window, and his words trail away into silence?"

Reuther turned about to see. Oliver was in front, conversing earnestly with Mr. Sloan. As they looked, he dashed back into the rear of the house, and they heard his voice rise once or twice in some ineffectual commands to his deaf servant, then there came a clatter and a rush from the direction of the stable, and they saw him flash by on a gaunt but fiery horse, and take with long bounds the road up which they had just labored. He had stopped to equip himself in some measure for his ride, but not the horse, which was without saddle or any sort of bridle but a halter strung about his neck.

This was slight; or so it appeared to Mr. Sloan, as he watched the young man disappear over the brow of the hill. What Mr. Black thought was not so apparent. He had no wish to discourage Reuther whose feeling was one of relief as her first word showed. "Oliver is gone. We shall not have to hurry now and perhaps if I had a few minutes in which to rest—"

She was on the verge of fainting again.

And then Alanson Black showed of what stuff he was made. In ten minutes he had hustled about the half-deserted building, and with the aid of the dazed and uncomprehending deaf-mute, managed to prepare a cup of hot tea and a plate of steaming eggs for the weary girl.

After such an effort, Reuther felt obliged to eat, and she did; seeing which, the lawyer left her for a moment and went out to question their guide.

"Where's the young lady?" This from Mr. Sloan.

"Eating something. Come in and have a bite, and let the horses eat, too. The young fellow went off pretty quick, eh?"

"Yes—The drawl was one of doubt. But quickness don't count. Fast or slow, he's on his way to capture—if that's what you want to know."

"What? We are followed, then?"

"There are men on the road; two, as I told you before. He can't get by them—if that's what he wants to do."

"But I thought they fell back. We didn't hear them after you joined us."

"No; they didn't come on. They didn't have to. This is the only road down the mountain, and it's one you've got to follow or go tumbling over the precipice. All they've got to do is to wait for him; and that's what I tried to tell him, but he just shook his arm at me and rode on. He might better have waited—for company."

Mr. Black cast a glance behind him, saw that the door of the house was almost closed and ventured to put another question.

"What did he ask you when he came out here?"

"Why we had chosen such an early hour to bring him his father's message," Sloan replied.

"And what did he say?"

"Wa'al, I said that there was another fellow down my way awful eager to see him, too; and that you were mortal anxious to get to him first. That was about it, wasn't it, sir?"

"Yes. And how did he take that?"

"He turned white, and asked me just what I meant. Then I said that some one wanted him pretty bad, for, early as it was, this stranger was up as soon as you, and had followed us into the mountains and might show up any time on the road. At which he gave me a stare, then plunged back into the house to get his hat and trot out his horse. I never saw quicker work. But it's no use; he can't escape those men. They know it, or they wouldn't have stopped where they did, waiting for him."

Mr. Black recalled the aspect of the gully, and decided that Mr. Sloan was right. There could be but one end to this adventure. Oliver would be caught in a manifest effort to escape, and the judge's cup of sorrow and humiliation would be full. He felt the shame of it himself, also the folly of his own methods and of the part he had allowed Reuther to play. Beckoning to his host to follow him, he turned toward the house.

"Don't mention your fears to the young lady," said he. "At least, not till we are well past the gully."

"I shan't mention anything. Don't you be afraid of that."

And with a simultaneous effort difficult for both, they assumed a more cheerful air, and briskly entered the house.

It was not until they were well upon the road back that Reuther ventured to speak of Oliver. She was riding as far from the edge of the precipice as possible. In descent it looked very formidable to her unaccustomed eye.

"This is a dangerous road for a man to ride bareback," she remarked. "I'm terrified when I think of it, Mr. Black. Why did he go off quite so suddenly? Is there a train he is anxious to reach? Mr. Sloan, is there a train?"

"Yes, miss, there is a train."

"Which he can get by riding fast?"

"I've known it done!"

"Then he is excusable." Yet her anxious glance stole ever and again to the dizzy verge toward which she now unconsciously urged her own horse till Mr. Black drew her aside.

A half-hour's further descent, then a quick turn and Mr. Sloan, who had ridden on before them, came galloping hastily back.

Mr. Black hastened to meet their guide. "What now?" he asked. "Have they come together? Have the detectives got him?"

"No, not him; only his horse. The animal has just trotted up—riderless."

"Good God! The child's instinct was true. He has been thrown—"

"No," Mr. Sloan's mouth was close to the lawyer's ear. "There's another explanation. If the fellow is game, and anxious enough to reach the train to risk his neck for it, there's a path he could have taken which would get him there without his coming round this turn." Then as Reuther came ambling up: "Young lady, don't let me scare you, but it looks now as if the young man had taken a short cut to the station. Look back along the edge of the precipice for about half a mile, and you will see shooting up from the gully a solitary tree whose topmost branch reaches within a few feet of the road above."

"Yes," she suddenly replied, as her glance fell on the one red splash showing against the dull gray of the cliff.

"A leap from the road, if well-timed, would land a man among some very stalwart branches."

"But—but—if he didn't reach—didn't catch—"

"Young lady, he's a man in a thousand. If you want the proof, look over there."

He was pointing again, but in a very different direction now. As her anxious eye sought the place he indicated, her face flushed crimson with evanescent joy. Just where the open ground of the gully melted again into the forest, the figure of a man could be seen moving very quickly. In another moment it had disappeared amid the foliage.

"Straight for the station," announced Mr. Sloan; and, taking out his watch, added quickly: "the train is not due for 15 minutes. He'll catch it."

"The train south?"

"Yes, and the train north. They pass here."

Mr. Black turned a startled eye upon the guide. But Reuther's face was still alight. She felt very happy. Their journey had not been for naught. He would have six hours' start of his pursuers; he would be that much sooner in Shelby; he would hear the accusation against him and refute it before she saw him again.

But Mr. Black's thoughts were less pleasing than hers. He had never had more than a passing hope of Oliver's innocence, and now he had none at all. The young man had fled, not in response to his father's telegram, but under the impulse of his own fears. They would not find him in Shelby when they returned. They might never find him anywhere again. A pretty story to carry back to the judge.

As he dwelt upon this thought his reflections grew more and more gloomy, and he had little to say till he reached the turn where the two men still awaited them.

In the encounter which followed no attempt was made by either party to disguise the nature of the business which thus had brought them together. The man whom Mr. Black took to be a Shelby detective nodded as they met and remarked, with a quick glance at Reuther:

"So you've come without him! I'm sorry for that. I was in hopes that I might be spared the long ride up the mountain."

Mr. Black limited his answer to one of his sour smiles. "Whose horse is this?" came in peremptory demand from the other man, with a nod toward the animal which could now be seen idly grazing by the wayside. "And how came it on the road alone?"

"We can only give you these facts," rejoined the lawyer. "It came from Tempest lodge. It started out ahead of us with the gentlemen we had gone to visit on its back. We did not pass the gentleman on the road, and if he has not passed you he must have left the road somewhere on foot. He did not go back to the lodge."

"Mr. Black—"

"I am telling you the absolute truth. Make what you will of it. His father desires him home, and sent a message. This message this young lady undertook to deliver, and she did deliver it, with the consequences I have mentioned. If you doubt me take your ride. It is not an easy one, and the only man remaining at the lodge is deaf as a post."

"Mr. Black has told the whole story," averred the guide.

They looked at Reuther.

"I have nothing to add," said she. "I have been terrified lest the gentleman you wish to see was thrown from the horse's back over the precipice. But perhaps he found some way of getting down on foot. He is a very strong and daring man."

"The tree!" ejaculated the detective's companion. He was from a neighboring locality and remembered this one natural ladder up the side of the gully.

"Yes, the tree," acknowledged Mr. Sloan. "That, or a fall. Let us hope it was not a fall."

As he ceased a long screech from an approaching locomotive woke up the echoes of the forest. It was answered by another from the opposite direction. Both trains were on time. The relief felt by Reuther could not be concealed. The detective noticed it.

"I'm wasting time here," said he. "Excuse me, Mr. Black, if I push on ahead of you. If we don't meet at the station, we shall meet in Shelby."

Mr. Black's mouth twisted grimly. He had no doubt of the latter fact.

Next minute they were all cantering in the one direction, the detective very much in the advance.

"Let me go with you to the station," entreated Reuther, as Mr. Black held up his arms to lift her from her horse at the door of the hotel.

But his refusal was peremptory. "I'll be back in just five minutes," said he. And without waiting for a second pleading look, he lifted her gently off and carried her in.

He Was Pointing Again but in a Different Direction Now.

When he returned, as he did in the time specified, he had but one word for her.

"Gone," said he.

"Thank God!" she murmured with a smile.

Not having a smile to add to hers, the lawyer withdrew.

Oliver was gone—but gone north.

AUSTRIANS CUT OFF FROM ALLIES

Russians Continue Offensive in Krasnik Region.

NO FEAR IN PETROGRAD

Czar Confident German Drive Against Polish City of Warsaw Is Doomed to Failure.

London, July 12.—Military observers, in considering the reasons for the Austrian defeat in the region of Krasnik and the opportunity it has given the Russians to assume a counter-offensive are of divided opinions.

The bulletins received in London from Petrograd indicate clearly one thing—that the army of Archduke Joseph Ferdinand has lost touch with that of Field Marshal von Mackensen, but whether the Austrians were left unsupported through the transfer of German troops northward for a new drive upon Warsaw has not been determined.

Increased activity by the Germans on the front west of Warsaw and to the northwest on the line from Przemyśl to Osovozw apparently indicates that the Austrians have been left to bear the burden of further operations in Galicia and southwestern Poland, while the Germans attempt to break down the Russian defense to the west and northward of Warsaw against which they have been vainly hammering for months.

The Austrian official statement, although declaring the Russians have been repulsed in the sector of Krasnik, makes it plain that the Russian offensive is maintained in the region. The German communication states that the situation in this theater of war is unchanged.

There is no fear felt in Petrograd over another frontal attack on Warsaw. The Germans have already sent their finest troops against the Russians in such an effort, and they have died before the Russian trenches. Although the Russian supply of ammunition remains far from what it ought to be, it is felt that there is enough for the guns defending Warsaw from such an attack to prevent such a catastrophe as overwhelmed Russia after the Dnieper.

The regrouping of the Russian army after its long retreat gives it the advantage of a network of railways while the enemy is at a corresponding disadvantage through lack of communication in Galicia and southwestern Poland.

With his army backed by the Ivan gorod-Koval railway, Grand Duke Nicholas has been in close touch with his base at Brest-Litovsk, which is the greatest military supply station in Russia. He has been able to draw on Ivan gorod, Warsaw, Moscow, Kiev, and the other big centers for the distribution of troops and materials.

On the other hand the Austro-German armies have been far from railway support. The armies have been forced to march over an extremely difficult, rough and wooded country. Every mile took them far from their direct communication lines. The Russians, in their retreat across the territory from the Galician frontier, destroyed all the bridges and made the roads as nearly impassable as possible, so that at the time the czar's forces were being strengthened by men and munitions the Austro-German allies were feeling the first effects of fighting in a region cut off from their bases.

New York, July 10.—Convinced that his fight for freedom was won and that he would soon be released, Harry K. Thaw spent some time in studying maps of railroads between New York and California.

Thaw did not like the two days postponement of the sanity hearing, as he felt it only delayed his final release. He seemed to enjoy his regular exercise in the Ludlow street jail yard much more than usual.

Worth Knowing.

Turpentine mixed with stove polish prevents rust and gives a brighter gloss than the use of water.

AEROPLANE TURNS OVER IN RIVER

Two Rescued When Machine Hit Submerged Log.

New York, July 12.—After the aeroplane which was scheduled to make its initial trip to Albany had gone about five blocks on the Hudson river above its starting point at One Hundred and Thirty-second street, it glided along the water a few feet, struck a log and turned turtle.

Edwin A. Morse, son of Charles W. Morse, and general manager of the Hudson Navigation company, was in the hydro-aeroplane with the aviator, A. B. Gaines. Both men were rescued and taken ashore in a launch which was nearby.

The hydro-aeroplane was badly damaged. When it had turned over the top wing was torn and the frame-work dislodged. Mr. Gaines said he believed the engine was still in good condition.

The hydro-aeroplane will be run by the Hudson-Wright Aero company, which expects to have a schedule from New York to Albany. The fare will be $150, and each flying boat will carry four passengers. If the new project succeeds there will be shorter trips arranged for persons who desire to spend a shorter time in the air. The trip to Albany will last a little over two hours if there are no mishaps.

ROMANCE OF A STREET CAR MISHAP

Careless Man Makes Amends For Thoughtlessness.

Miss Anderson was very romantic. She could make a love story out of any case where there was marriage or failure to marry. One day Mr. and Mrs. Buddington called, and as they passed out Miss Cartright came in.

"What a singular looking couple," remarked Miss Cartright.

"Do you think so? Poor things, they can't help it. That disfigurement is connected with their courtship. Sit down; I'll tell you about it."

Miss Cartright seated herself on a divan and Miss Anderson proceeded. "Mrs. Buddington was not her husband's first love. That's where the romance comes in.

"But first I must tell you that Mr. Buddington was engaged to Miss Martin. It was one of those cases where a good, noble man, when he is too young to know his mind, falls in love with a pretty face and afterward meets one for whom he conceives a grand passion.

"Well, one day Mr. Buddington was in a trolley car. Mr. Buddington carried a silk umbrella. He didn't carry it as a lady would, by the handle, the point lowered, but just like a man, under his arm and at an angle. He was holding to a strap, with his back to the front of the car, when it came to a sudden stop. Mr. Buddington was thrown violently backward. There was a shriek directly behind him, and, turning, he saw a beautiful girl, with her nose bleeding profusely. His umbrella point had rammed it.

"Mr. Buddington apologized as best he could and, as the bleeding continued, suggested that the girl get out at a corner drug store. She consented, and at the next corner Mr. Buddington pulled the bell rope, the car stopped, and the two got out, attended by a sympathetic married lady.

"It wouldn't have been proper for them to go without a chaperon," put in Miss Cartright. "How nicely it all comes about!"

"Very. The drug clerk telephoned for a doctor, who came and bound up Miss Palmer's nose. That was her name. Then Mr. Buddington insisted on calling a carriage, and the three were driven to Miss Palmer's home.

"The next day Mr. Buddington called at Miss Palmer's house to ask how she was doing. Miss Palmer's mother came down into the drawing room and assured Mr. Buddington that her daughter was doing very well, but her nose was bandaged and a bag of ice tied to the end of it to prevent a recurrence of the bleeding. This of course prevented Miss Palmer from coming down."

"I wouldn't have gone down for a fortune," said Miss Cartright.

"Mr. Buddington called often, but Mrs. Palmer always came down in her stead, making excuses why Miss Palmer did not come down herself. Mr. Buddington could not surmise what it meant. He was dreadfully worried. Finally, at one of his visits, Miss Palmer came down to see him, and what do you suppose?"

"What?"

"Her nose had been broken."

"How awful!"

"Mr. Buddington felt that he was to blame for the broken nose and was so sweet about it that he quite captivated the poor girl. He called frequently, always asking her 'What I can do to repair the damage?' You see her beauty was spoiled, and unfortunately her face was her fortune. He couldn't do anything to repair the damage; only a doctor could do that, and there was some reason why they didn't want to perform an operation in her case. I don't know what, so there was nothing that Mr. Buddington could do in the matter except—"

"To marry her."

"How did you know it was coming out that way?"

"I'm very good at seeing through impenetrable plots."

"But Mr. Buddington was engaged to Miss Martin. He passed many a day and night's anguish, often lying awake for hours struggling with himself like the good, noble man he was, thinking himself bound in honor to both girls, though he now knew he loved—"

"The girl with the—"

"Miss Palmer."

"What did he do?"

"Why, at last he decided that Miss Martin, not being disfigured, did not need him, and he wrote her a good kind note, telling her that he thought honor required him to marry Miss Palmer."

"What a high minded way to put it!" suggested Miss Cartright. "And what was her reply? Did she generously release him?"

"Why, no; she showed his note to her brother, who went to Mr. Buddington's office, and before he knew what the fellow was going to do Martin struck him in the face and—"

"What?"

"Broke his nose."

"The brute!"

"Mr. Buddington felt released after this."

"I should think so."

"So he went to Miss Palmer and proposed to her. And here's where a new complication comes in. He found that Miss Palmer was engaged to a man she didn't love. But since Mr. Buddington's nose had been broken in her behalf she broke her engagement with the other man and married Mr. Buddington."

"How lovely!"

Subject to the Non Partisan Primary.

In announcing my candidacy for President Judge of the Court of Common Pleas of the 51st Judicial District, I wish to thank my friends who, without regard to Party, have so generously expressed their approval of it and assure every voter of Adams and Fulton Counties that I shall appreciate his suffrage and support.

The Judgeship is now non-partisan—made so specifically by Act of Assembly—and if nominated and elected to that high office it will be my endeavor to observe the spirit of that act and to administer the duties of the office with fidelity and impartiality, to the end that the law may be enforced and justice done.

Few Folks Have

Gray Hair Now

Druggist Says Ladies are Using Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

Hair that loses its color and lustre, or when it fades, turns gray, dull and lifeless, is caused by a lack of sulphur in the hair. Our grandmother made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to keep her locks dark and beautiful, and thousands of women and men who value that even color, that beautiful dark shade of hair which is so attractive, use only this old-time recipe.

Nowadays we get this famous mixture by asking at any drug store for a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," which darkens the hair so naturally, so evenly, that nobody can possibly tell it has been applied. Besides, it takes off dandruff, stops scalp itching and falling hair. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also brings back the gloss and lustre and gives it an appearance of abundance.

you are eating now develop pounds and pounds more of healthy flesh. Toneline is safe, pleasant, efficient and inexpensive, as it costs only $1.00 for a 15-day treatment. Mail orders filled by American Proprietary Co., Boston, Mass., People's Drug Store, Gettysburg, Pa.

An Indian Stratagem

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

To older persons it seems but a short time since Indian fighting was a constant part of the duties of our regular army. The last events which attracted unusual attention throughout the country were the Custer massacre and the MODOC war, during which General Canby was subjected to the traditional treachery of the Indians and murdered while in council with them. Today all that has passed; the white man has swept over the continent from the Missouri to the Pacific as he had swept from the Atlantic to the Missouri.

In one of those Indian wars of later days a little Indian boy was captured, and since there was no practicable way to return him to his people, he was taken to the headquarters of the command in Fort R. There he was treated so kindly that he grew to love the white people.

Tommy, as the boy was called, however, inherited the nature of his red forefathers. He loved to hunt, to ride, to live out in the open air, and a time came when he employed that talent for strategem, for which the Indian has always been distinguished.

This came about when the force at the fort, including the women and children, were in peril of their lives. The Indians, who had been showing signs of restiveness, suddenly broke away from all restraint, and settlers came running into the fort, saying that they were burning and massacring the whites. It was soon learned that they were advancing to attack the fort. Everything was got in readiness to receive them, but when they came it was in such numbers that it was evident they could not long be resisted.

Fort R. was a two company post, and at this time the enlisted men numbered little more than a hundred men. The post was besieged by some 2,000 Indians, and if overpowered it was certain that every one in it would be massacred. The commander, Major MacRae, was chiefly concerned for the women and children. It was terrible to think of his men being murdered, but they were soldiers, whose business it was to die, while the women and children were noncombatants and must be cut down without defense.

Major MacRae knew that some thirty miles to the south of him were four companies of cavalry, with light and non-suitable for Indian warfare. The commander of this force, if news could be carried to him, would come at once to the relief of Fort R., and the savages would not likely be able to stand against the combined cavalry and infantry and especially the artillery. But the Indians had formed a circle about the fort, and no messenger could get through their lines. There was a despairing sternness on the face of Major MacRae when Tommy approached him and, saluting, as he had learned to do from the soldiers, said to him:

"I'll take a message through to the cavalry."

The major turned, looked at the boy and said: "You can't get through. No one could get through." Then, thinking Tommy meant that he would go as an Indian, he added, "They would torture you for a renegade."

"I won't go as an Indian. Give me the swiftest horse in the command."

"There's not a horse swift enough to escape their bullets."

"They won't shoot the horse. I'll show you what I will do."

The major produced the horse, and Tommy directed that he be bound to the horse's belly with his head protruding between the forelegs. A revolver was thrust in the boy's belt, and the bridle reins he held in his hands. The major wrote a few lines on a paper, and Tommy put it inside his shirt.

The major added to Tommy's device by sending out the garrison to make a brief assault on the Indians. Tommy and his horse being placed in the center. During a fusillade the boy was let go, and a riderless horse was seen by the red men to gallop away. Those Indians who were bearing the brunt of the attack had enough to do to defend themselves, but others, seeing a horse galloping away, gave chase. Some of them could easily have shot the animal, but no one thought of doing so, desiring to get possession of him for use.

The horse was so swift that but few of the Indians succeeded in getting near him. One redskin stood directly in his way and threw up his arms to stop him, but Tommy, who wore spurs, dug them into the brute's belly and came near running the man down. When Tommy had nearly cleared the circle an Indian suddenly appeared from a thicket and succeeded in seizing the bridle. Tommy shot him dead with his revolver.

This was the last of Tommy's adventures. After clearing the Indian circle he unstrapped himself, mounted the horse's back and did not stop till the animal fell with him in the encampment of the cavalry. He gave his message to the commander, and in less than ten minutes all except a ramp guard had begun a forced march to Fort R.

The head of the column was soon attacking the Indians. Joyful by the garrison, but the latter resisted till the rannon arrived, when they got away as fast as they could go.

Tommy remained with the army, petted by the old men, and he secured a pension from the government.

Undeserved Reputation.

"Sometimes," said Uncle Eben, "a man gets a reputation of being terrible industrious when he's only nagging."
